The Hitachi Group has a wide range of diverse business and its value chain is large and complex. Therefore, we believe that human rights due diligence needs to be tailored to the characteristics of each business and the region in which we operate. Our Human Rights Due Diligence process includes identifying and assessing potential or actual human rights impacts, taking appropriate actions to prevent or mitigate risks, and establishing indicators to verify the effectiveness of measures.

We also fulfill our accountability to stakeholders by appropriately disclosing information about our efforts to respect human rights.

The above-mentioned examples are just illustrations of the kind of things that fall into each category and not the complete list.

Minor misconduct:

Verbal Warning

Employees may be issued an oral warning for performance or behavioral problem. It is issued privately to the employee by the immediate Supervisor/Reporting Manager. An employee is explained the exact problem and measures he/she must take to ensure satisfactory behavior. The employee is informed that he/she will be observed for a defined period and if there is no change in the behavior, written warning may be given. However, if there is improvement then no action will be taken. The decision is of the supervisor/manager.

Written Warning

In a situation where the employee shows more than 1 minor misconduct or if there is no improvement after the verbal warning then a written warning will be issued by the immediate manager to the employee. The letter will explain the exact concern and employee is required to read and sign on the letter.

The letter will be added to employee's personal file of the employee. If during the evaluation time another misconduct is done by the employee or there is no improvement, then he/she may be terminated immediately without any notice or salary in lieu at the sole discretion of HR.

However, if the behavior is satisfactory then the warning will be removed but a note will be made in the personal file.

The duration of the letter can be from 1 month – 2 months which will be determined by the manager. The PIP letter will be issued only if manager explicates that employee has scope of improvement.

Re-Hiring/Re-Recruitment policy:

Objective: Employees are the best ambassadors of the organization even after they leave.

In today's market condition where the professionals with right skills and attitude are scarce, it makes sense to rehire the ex-employees on selective basis.

The company has the benefit of having known the performance and cultural fitment in the organization.

Guidelines for Re-hire:

- He/she left on an amicable note.

competence. Therefore, the factors to be considered while re-hiring should be:

- Past performance
- Competence
- Qualifies for the opening

Process:

1. The former employee must not have left on bad note, to say that; there was nothing adverse against him/her in terms of integrity, discipline, behavior etc.
2. Provided, one was not marked "Not eligible for re-hire" by previous manager/HR.
3. Re-hiring must be against an existing approved vacancy. The individual must wait for one year from his/her original Last working date to be re-hired, unless the individual was terminated due to position elimination/business redundancy (contract expired).
4. In case a resource is re-hired/re-recruited before the end of waiting period he/she shall not be considered for salary hike and will be hired according to last CTC drawn with HSI or current CTC as deemed fit by the organization.
5. If an employee re-joins after the waiting period, he/she will be re-recruited with normal average increment for the period based on his last rating i.e. at a level/grade he/she would have reached had he continued in the organization.

Such cases should be very limited, and need based only, with justifiable reasons. Re-hiring should in exceptional cases only.
